Sustainable Development Goal (SDG) 16 aims to promote peaceful and inclusive societies, provide access to justice for all, and build effective, accountable, and inclusive institutions at all levels. SDG 16 and human rights are mutually reinforcing, as both seek to create environments where individuals can live free from fear and oppression. The key focus areas of SDG 16, such as reducing violence, promoting the rule of law, combating organized crime, reducing corruption, and ending abuse and exploitation, are inherently aligned with human rights principles. Conversely, the protection and promotion of human rights are essential for achieving the goals of SDG 16, as they lay the foundation for peace, justice, and inclusive societies.

While promoting peace and inclusivity is often seen as the responsibility of the state, achieving these goals in today's interconnected world requires a collaborative approach involving technology and law. Technology plays a pivotal role by facilitating transparency, accountability, and access to justice through digital platforms and data analytics. Leveraging advancements such as blockchain for secure transactions and AI for legal research can streamline legal processes, making justice more accessible and efficient. This alignment supports SDG 16's objectives of promoting the rule of law and ensuring equal access to justice, fostering an environment conducive to sustainable development. Technological innovations and legal frameworks that navigate the right to a fair trial, legal remedy, and the right to participate in public affairs ensure transparency and accountability. Similarly, access to information is interlinked with reducing corruption and maintaining the rule of law. The use of technology is promising in these areas for monitoring and protecting human rights, further solidifying the connection between SDG 16 and human rights.

The conference aims to harness the synergetic study of human rights, technology and law with SDG16 in order to make the present 'decade of action' truly instrumental in achieving the goals of peace, justice and inclusivity for all. Integrating these areas necessitates strategic frameworks that encourage cross-sector partnerships and innovative solutions. Collaboration between tech innovators and legal experts can drive initiatives like legal tech startups that simplify legal procedures or digital platforms that enhance public participation in governance. Regulatory frameworks must evolve to accommodate technological advancements while upholding principles of fairness and equity. By integrating technology, human rights, and law, societies can advance towards achieving SDG 16, fostering peace, justice, and strong institutions worldwide.
